Advanced Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence Training Course

Ref: 411_14630 Date: 2 – 13 May 2027 Location: Manama Fees: 8000 GBP

Advanced Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence is a 2-week training course for team leaders and line managers, in which each participant produces a Team Climate Diagnosis and Leadership Action Plan for the group they lead. Restructuring, hybrid rosters and constant change mean that a team's mood, candour and cohesion now decide whether targets are met. Jupiter Prime Training delivers this course for leaders responsible for how their people feel and perform together.

Why Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence Matters Now

Three forces press on team leaders. Repeated restructuring and new systems unsettle routines, so anxiety and resistance spread through a group. Hybrid rosters split teams across locations, weakening the informal contact that once built cohesion. And employees increasingly stay or leave because of their immediate manager. Teams whose leaders build trust and candour raise problems early, recover from setbacks and keep good people; teams led without that attention hide mistakes, fragment into cliques and lose talent, whether on a hospital ward, a sales floor or an engineering site. The course draws on situational leadership, the team development stages of forming, storming, norming and performing, and research on psychological safety.

Who Gains Most from Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence

- Team leaders accountable for the morale and output of a direct group
- Line managers who hold one-to-ones, appraisals and corrective conversations
- Supervisors steering shift or site teams through new systems and restructuring
- Project leads holding cross-functional members together without line authority
- Deputy managers preparing to take over a larger unit

A department gains most when its line managers attend as a cohort and return with one climate survey, a common language for team dynamics and agreed norms for raising concerns.

Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence Capabilities

The outcomes shift attention from the leader's own reactions to the mood, candour and cohesion of the whole group.

- Assess team climate through pulse surveys, observation and listening sessions — the leader's own manager and HR partner
- Build trust and candour by modelling vulnerability and responding constructively to bad news — team members
- Apply situational leadership to match direction and support to each member's readiness — individual development decisions
- Design team norms and rituals that sustain psychological safety in hybrid settings — the whole team
- Communicate change in ways that acknowledge loss and channel resistance into contribution — affected staff and sponsors
- Specify a leadership action plan with measures of engagement, conflict and turnover — senior management

Key Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence Terms

- Psychological safety — a shared belief within a team that members can speak up, ask questions or admit mistakes without being punished or humiliated.
- Team climate — the prevailing mood, norms and quality of relationships that members experience day to day in a group.
- Situational leadership — adapting the balance of direction and support to the competence and commitment each team member shows for a task.
- Team development stages — forming, storming, norming and performing, the typical sequence a group passes through as it matures.
- Pulse survey — a short, frequent questionnaire that tracks team sentiment on a few items such as trust, workload and clarity.
- Emotional contagion — the spread of moods from one person, often the leader, to others in a group through tone, expression and behaviour.

- Hold structured one-to-ones with every team member using situational leadership to set the right mix of direction and support for each person

Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence Questions FAQ

What is team leadership and emotional intelligence and why does it matter now?

It is the use of emotional awareness and skill to build trust, motivation and candour across a team. It matters now because restructuring, hybrid working and constant change make team mood and cohesion decisive for performance and retention.

Which roles gain most from team leadership and emotional intelligence?

Team leaders and line managers responsible for a direct group gain most, along with supervisors steering teams through change. Project leads and deputy managers preparing for larger teams also benefit.

How does a team leadership and emotional intelligence course differ from a personal emotional intelligence course?

A personal course focuses on an individual's own emotions and relationships. This course concentrates on the group, covering team climate, psychological safety, team conflict, motivation and leading emotions through change.

What do you bring back from a team leadership and emotional intelligence course?

You bring back a diagnosis of your team's current climate, agreed team norms, conversation structures for coaching and conflict, and an action plan with measures of engagement and turnover.

Team Leadership and Emotional Intelligence: The Way Forward

The Team Climate Diagnosis and Leadership Action Plan first informs which two or three climate issues the leader tackles with the team in the next quarter. The leader, their own manager and the HR partner use it to track progress and support. After the next pulse survey, the diagnosis is worth revisiting, since changes in candour and engagement scores show whether new norms have taken hold.
