Advanced Communication and Emotional Intelligence Training Course

Ref: 445_16014 Date: 25 January – 5 February 2027 Location: London Fees: 9500 GBP

Communication and Emotional Intelligence is a 2-week advanced training course for managers and team leaders who handle difficult conversations, conflict and demanding stakeholder relationships, and each participant leaves with an emotional intelligence communication playbook. Teams now work under pressure, across cultures and through screens, so leaders who misread emotions lose trust and talent quickly. Jupiter Prime Training runs this course for leaders whose conversations shape team climate and results.

Why Communication and Emotional Intelligence Matters Now

Three forces have made emotionally intelligent communication a management priority. Hybrid and remote work strip out many visual cues, so tone is misread and small frictions escalate. Workforces are more diverse in culture and expectation, and employees increasingly judge leaders by how they listen and give feedback. Change and workload pressure also raise stress, making composure and empathy as important as technical expertise. Organisations whose managers communicate with emotional intelligence keep people engaged, resolve disputes early and negotiate better outcomes; those that neglect it face disengagement, turnover and costly conflict. The course draws on established emotional intelligence research, active listening practice and interest-based negotiation principles.

Who Gains Most from Communication and Emotional Intelligence

- Managers who hold performance, change and feedback conversations with their teams
- Team leaders who mediate tensions and keep collaboration healthy under pressure
- Project and account leads who manage demanding clients and senior stakeholders
- Heads of sections who negotiate resources and priorities with peers in other departments
- Human resources and employee relations partners who coach managers through sensitive cases

Leadership teams that send several managers together gain most, because they can agree a shared language for feedback, conflict and recognition on return.

Communication and Emotional Intelligence Capabilities

Participants move from reacting to emotionally charged moments to reading, regulating and steering them with intention.

- Assess personal emotional triggers and communication blind spots — line managers and coaches
- Apply self-regulation techniques during tense meetings and replies — teams and clients
- Build active listening and empathic responses — employees raising concerns
- Communicate assertive feedback using structured models — performance and development decisions
- Weigh conflict styles and mediation options — team cohesion and stakeholder trust
- Calibrate negotiation moves to emotional signals in the room — commercial and internal agreements

Key Communication and Emotional Intelligence Terms

- Emotional intelligence — The ability to recognise, understand and manage one's own emotions and to read and influence the emotions of others.
- Self-regulation — Managing impulses and emotional reactions so that responses fit the situation rather than the mood of the moment.
- Active listening — Giving full attention, reflecting content and feelings back, and asking questions to confirm understanding before responding.
- Psychological safety — A shared belief within a team that people can speak up, admit mistakes or challenge ideas without fear of punishment.
- Assertiveness — Expressing needs, views and boundaries clearly and respectfully, without passivity or aggression.
- Emotional contagion — The spread of moods from one person to others in a group, often through tone, expression and body language.

Applying Communication and Emotional Intelligence After the Course

- Hold one planned difficult conversation using the preparation grid and de-escalation phrases practised in the course, then review it with a trusted colleague.
- Introduce the situation, behaviour and impact feedback model in a team meeting and use it for recognition and improvement messages for a month.

Communication and Emotional Intelligence Questions FAQ

What is communication and emotional intelligence, and why does it matter now?

Communication and emotional intelligence is the skill of recognising and managing emotions, yours and others', to listen, give feedback and resolve conflict well. It matters now because hybrid work, diverse teams and constant change make misread emotions costly.

Which roles gain most from communication and emotional intelligence training?

Managers and team leaders who handle difficult conversations gain most. Leaders in sectors such as healthcare, engineering, retail and financial services use these skills daily with staff, patients, clients and partners under pressure.

How does communication and emotional intelligence training differ from a general communication skills course?

It goes beneath techniques to the emotions driving them. You work on triggers, self-regulation, empathy and reading emotional signals in meetings and negotiations, which a general communication skills course treats only briefly.

What do you bring back from communication and emotional intelligence training?

You bring back a personal playbook with your trigger inventory, regulation strategies, listening and feedback scripts, a rehearsed difficult conversation and stakeholder relationship actions you can start the following week.

Communication and Emotional Intelligence: The Way Forward

The emotional intelligence communication playbook records each participant's triggers, regulation tactics, feedback scripts and relationship priorities. Its first use is the next difficult conversation or tense negotiation, where it guides preparation and tone. Line managers and coaches can use it in development discussions. After a few weeks of practice, the trigger inventory deserves a fresh look as new patterns appear.
