Advanced Executive HR Management Training Course for HR Directors

Ref: 726_27235 Date: 1 – 12 March 2027 Location: Casablanca Fees: 6800 GBP

Executive HR Management for HR Directors is a 2-week training course for heads of HR, senior HR business partners and people executives who answer to a board, and it ends with each participant drafting an executive HR plan tied to business strategy. Boards now expect the people function to show how workforce choices move cost, capability and risk. Jupiter Prime Training runs this course on executive HR management for directors who shape that answer.

Why Executive HR Management Matters Now

Three forces press on the HR director today: boards and investors asking for disclosed human capital measures, shifting skills demand as work is redesigned, and tighter scrutiny of reward and executive pay. An organisation that handles these well can show the board where people spending creates capability; one that handles them badly faces attrition in critical roles, unexplained payroll growth and weak succession. The course draws on ISO 30414, the international guideline for internal and external human capital reporting, together with established HR operating model and strategic workforce planning practice.

Who Gains Most from Executive HR Management

- Heads of the people function accountable to the chief executive and board for workforce outcomes
- Senior HR business partners who translate divisional strategy into headcount, capability and cost choices
- Centre of expertise leaders responsible for reward, talent or organisation design policy
- Senior people managers who own large workforces and sign off structural change
- HR operations heads who run shared services and human capital reporting

An HR leadership team that sends its director and two or three business partners together gains most, because the plan they build reflects one agreed view of the operating model.

Executive HR Management Capabilities

Participants leave able to take people decisions at board level and defend them with evidence.

- Assess the fit between the current HR operating model and business strategy — chief executive and executive committee
- Design a human capital metrics set based on ISO 30414 — board and audit committee
- Build a scenario-based strategic workforce plan — finance director and divisional heads
- Align reward architecture with pay positioning and performance — remuneration committee
- Weigh succession risk across critical executive roles — nomination committee
- Communicate a costed people agenda in board language — non-executive directors

Key Executive HR Management Terms

- HR operating model — the way the people function is organised into business partners, centres of expertise and shared services to deliver its work.
- Human capital reporting — the disclosure of workforce measures such as cost, productivity and turnover to internal leaders and external stakeholders.
- Strategic workforce planning — forecasting the numbers, skills and cost of people an organisation needs against several future business scenarios.
- Reward architecture — the structure of grades, pay ranges, incentives and benefits that sets how an organisation pays its people.
- Critical role — a position whose vacancy or weak performance would materially damage strategy delivery or operations.
- HR scorecard — a balanced set of people measures linked to business goals and reviewed by leadership at fixed intervals.

Executive HR Management Questions FAQ

What is executive HR management and why does it matter now?

Executive HR management is the board-level leadership of the people function. It matters now because directors and investors expect workforce cost, capability and risk to be reported and managed with the same discipline as finance.

Which roles gain most from executive HR management training?

HR directors and senior HR business partners gain most. Centre of expertise leaders and senior line executives who own large workforces also benefit, because they take or shape the structural and reward decisions the course covers.

How does executive HR management differ from a general HR management course?

It works at director level rather than practitioner level. A general course covers the employee lifecycle and HR policy craft; this course covers operating model design, board reporting, executive pay and restructuring decisions.

What will you bring back from the executive HR management course?

You bring back a costed executive HR plan. It sets operating model choices, workforce targets, reward priorities and the human capital measures you will report to your board.

Executive HR Management: The Way Forward

The executive HR plan built on the course first informs the choice of HR operating model and the headcount budget agreed with finance. It is used by the HR director, business partners and the executive committee. After its first board cycle, revisit the human capital measures, since the questions directors actually ask show which metrics deserve a permanent place.
