One-to-One and Team Routine Skills for New Managers Training Course

Ref: 1613_59035 Date: 26 – 30 July 2027 Location: Amsterdam Fees: 5600 GBP

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills for New Managers is a 1-week training course for newly appointed managers and supervisors moving from doing the work to running it, and it produces a New Manager Team Rhythm Kit. Organisations promote strong performers fast, yet many stumble because nobody showed them how to hold regular one-to-ones, set expectations or run a weekly team cycle. This course on One-to-One and Team Routine Skills is delivered by Jupiter Prime Training.

Why One-to-One and Team Routine Skills Matter Now

Three pressures shape one-to-one and team routine skills today: faster promotions that put specialists in charge of former peers, hybrid schedules that remove casual corridor contact, and staff who expect frequent, structured conversations about their work. A new manager who sets clear expectations, runs steady one-to-ones and builds a predictable team rhythm earns credibility within weeks. One who improvises damages trust and loses good people. The course rests on the Situation-Behaviour-Impact SBI feedback model, Tuckman's stages of team development and practical role clarity charts.

Who Gains Most from One-to-One and Team Routine Skills

- Newly promoted supervisors now leading people they once worked beside
- First-time managers inheriting an established team
- Specialists taking on line responsibility for a small group
- Shift and project leads who hold regular check-ins with staff
- Deputies preparing to step into a vacant management role

A department that sends its cohort of recent promotions together gains most, because they can agree common one-to-one formats and support each other afterwards.

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills Capabilities

Participants leave with the conversations and routines that make the first months in a management role steady rather than chaotic.

- Apply the SBI model to give balanced, specific feedback — individual staff
- Build a weekly team rhythm of huddles, reviews and recognition — whole team
- Test a first-90-day plan with early wins and relationship goals — senior manager

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills Questions FAQ

What are One-to-One and Team Routine Skills and why do they matter now?

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills are the regular conversations and team cycles new managers use to set expectations and keep people on track. They matter now because promotions come fast and hybrid work removes informal contact.

Which roles gain most from One-to-One and Team Routine Skills training?

Newly promoted supervisors, first-time managers, specialists taking on staff, shift leads and deputies gain most, in workplaces from retail stores to hospital units.

How do One-to-One and Team Routine Skills differ from a general management skills course?

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills focus narrowly on the routines a new manager runs every week. A general management skills course covers wider topics such as strategy, data or wellbeing; this course builds day-to-day managing habits.

What do you bring back from One-to-One and Team Routine Skills training?

You bring back a role clarity chart, an expectations guide, a one-to-one template and tracker, SBI feedback scripts, a huddle format and a first-90-day plan, packed into one kit.

One-to-One and Team Routine Skills: The Way Forward

The New Manager Team Rhythm Kit first informs how a participant opens the first week back with the team. New managers use it for every one-to-one and huddle, team members use its working agreement to know what to expect, and senior managers use its 90-day plan to support the transition. After three months, revisit the one-to-one format as relationships mature.
