Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs Training Course

Ref: 288_9490 Date: 3 – 14 May 2027 Location: Milan Fees: 11100 GBP

Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs is a 2-week training course for company secretaries, corporate affairs directors and board members who shape how a board works and how the organisation speaks to investors, communities and public authorities, and it ends with a Board and Stakeholder Engagement Blueprint. Activist shareholders, social media scrutiny and expanding disclosure demands now test boards in public. Jupiter Prime Training runs this course on executive governance and corporate affairs for senior leaders.

Why Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs Matters Now

Three audiences now press on boards at once. Institutional investors and proxy advisers vote against directors when board composition, pay or sustainability reporting fall short. Employees, customers and communities judge conduct in real time through social and broadcast media. Public authorities expect early, credible engagement on policy that affects licences to operate. Organisations whose board agenda and corporate affairs strategy move together keep trust and room to act; those that treat them separately face contested votes, reputational crises and lost influence. The course draws on the COSO Enterprise Risk Management COSO ERM framework for board oversight of strategic and reputational exposure.

Who Gains Most from Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs

- Company secretaries who run board calendars, minutes, charters and director induction
- Corporate affairs directors who lead reputation, media, government relations and community engagement
- Non-executive and executive directors who chair or sit on board committees
- Investor relations heads who manage shareholder dialogue, results communication and voting outcomes
- Sustainability and public policy leads who represent the organisation to external stakeholders

Organisations gain most when the company secretary and the corporate affairs director attend together, because the board's agenda and the external narrative are then designed as one.

Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs Capabilities

Participants connect what happens inside the boardroom with what investors, media and public authorities see, so that decisions, disclosures and reputation reinforce one another.

- Assess board composition, skills and independence against strategy — nomination committee and chair
- Design committee mandates and annual board calendars that cover principal decisions — company secretary and board
- Build stakeholder maps that rank interest, influence and expectations — corporate affairs and executive committee
- Specify a disclosure policy for material information and market announcements — investor relations and legal counsel
- Communicate the organisation's position on contested public issues with a consistent narrative — chief executive and media spokespeople
- Apply board evaluation methods and turn findings into an improvement plan — chair and senior independent director

Key Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs Terms

- Board evaluation — a structured assessment of how the board, its committees and individual directors perform against agreed criteria.
- Corporate affairs — the function that manages reputation, media, government relations, community engagement and internal communication.
- Stakeholder materiality — the degree to which an issue matters both to stakeholders and to the organisation's long-term performance.
- Continuous disclosure — the practice of releasing price-sensitive information to the market promptly and equally to all investors.
- Licence to operate — the ongoing acceptance of an organisation's activities by communities, authorities and other stakeholders.
- Matters reserved for the board — the list of decisions that only the full board may take rather than management.

Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs Questions FAQ

What is executive governance and corporate affairs and why does it matter now?

Executive governance and corporate affairs links how the board decides with how the organisation engages investors, media, communities and public authorities. It matters now because boards are scrutinised publicly and quickly, and misaligned decisions and messages damage trust.

Which roles gain most from executive governance and corporate affairs training?

Company secretaries, corporate affairs directors and board members gain most, together with investor relations and public policy leads who carry the organisation's voice to shareholders and authorities.

How does executive governance and corporate affairs differ from a GRC integration course?

Executive governance and corporate affairs focuses on board effectiveness, reputation, disclosure and stakeholder engagement. A GRC integration course concentrates on aligning risk, compliance and internal audit assurance inside the organisation rather than on external relationships.

What do you bring back from executive governance and corporate affairs training?

You bring back a blueprint covering the board calendar, committee mandates and a stakeholder engagement plan. It also includes a skills matrix, disclosure policy outline and evaluation action plan you can adapt for your board.

Executive Governance and Corporate Affairs: The Way Forward

The Board and Stakeholder Engagement Blueprint first informs how next year's board calendar allocates time between strategy, risk and stakeholder issues. The company secretary owns it with the chair, while corporate affairs uses it to plan engagement. After its first use, revisit the materiality ranking, because public debate can move an issue from peripheral to urgent within months.
